BLACK FRIDAY DEALS!

There are tons and tons of sales happening for Black Friday this year. In fact, there are far too many sale prices to list in this newsletter, so we are being selective, and mainly including categories of items that we know will interest our customers. Check the blog for the full list of usual rebate deals and sales prices: <https://www.beauphoto.com/ongoing-rebates-canfujinikson/>

For any digital camera body you buy, get a rental coupon worth 7% of the value of the camera (before taxes), up to a maximum of $350!

Note that the rental coupon will need to be used within 6 months of issue, but can be used on multiple rentals and doesn't need to be spent all at once.

Hidden Treasures

Canon Macro Twin Lite MT-24EX - $500.00

This flash system offers full E-TTL metering and supports TTL auto flash plus manual flash exposure control on Canon EOS System cameras. The flexibility resides in its dual flash heads and the ability to rotate the heads, both vertically and horizontally, and remove them from the mounting ring for handheld use or for placement on a tripod. The flash heads can be fired together or individually, providing even greater lighting flexibility. More info here: https://www.canon.ca/en/product?name=Macro_Twin_Lite_MT-24EX&category=/en/products/Cameras/Accessories/Speedlite-Flashes

Canon Macro Ring Lite MR-14EX $350.00

The Macro Ring Lite MR-14EX is ideal for EOS close-up photography when used in conjunction with one of Canon's EF Macro lenses. It has a twin-tube design where both flash tubes can fire independently or together. Comes with Case and 2-adapter rings.

Also, there is a cool blast from the 1970s past - the Canon Macrolite ML-1 for $75.00. This will be more of a hand hold Macro light as the adapter rings will be hard to find.

Customer Spotlight #7 - Egor

A camera you think is fun to use ?

One, Nicole? I'm supposed to name ONE? You could just ask, "what's your favourite note on the piano keyboard?" or "which of your dreams about falling off a building and getting disembowelled on a fence post was the most disturbing?"

The only real answer to the "fun camera" question is ALL OF THEM. Every film camera I've ever shot has been a blast – even the ones I totally despised. Because experiencing new cameras is fun. Because "getting to know" a camera's quirks, curiosities, flaws, and perspective is fun. I suppose, if you're the sort who wants a camera to bend to your unassailable photographic will, then you'll colour me "nuts." But I let my photographic will bend to a camera's characteristics. I like to learn how a particular camera sees the world, and then pound the streets looking for photo opportunities that will exploit those characteristics. A Minolta TC-1 will not render the world like an Olympus XA, or a Leica M, or an Xpan, or a Pen FT, or a Fuji Natura Black, or a Sprocket Rocket, or a Konica Recorder, or... well... you get the idea. Some cameras excel at action; some at serenity. Some feed my need for murky pictorialism; some for documentary precision. Premium cameras beget premium photos. Eccentric cameras beget eccentric photos. Broken cameras can often beget the best photos of all.

Thinking about how the "fun" can often be in the "flaws," perhaps it might be ever-so-slightly more fun to use a crappy camera than an expensive one? There's no pressure to 'succeed' when your new camera costs less than your socks. You can be more forgiving of its peculiarities; more willing to embrace its foibles. That said, there's also an element of fun in that extra level of exhilaration you feel when you hold a premium photographic tool – a certain respect and admiration that you don't get from a misbegotten but lovable rust bucket.

So I'm sticking with my answer. ALL OF THEM.

What you like about it?

Well, crap. I guess I should have read ahead, since I think I addressed this question fully in my previous cop out... err... I mean "answer."

I will caution, however, that this perspective can (and will) result in some serious camera acquisition issues. After all, it can be almost as fun to figure out what your NEXT camera is, as it is to cycle film through all the delightful ones you already own. So having an understanding spouse is necessary. Or, better still, just be single and indulge liberally in your own psychosis.

Do you have an anecdote about camera?

Not only don't I have any anecdotes, but I don't have any antidotes either. Once you open yourself to the joy that every camera can bring, it's terminal.

I'm always amazed at the many fine cameras that linger on the shelves in Beau — unsold and unwanted simply because they aren't "cool" or "fashionable." Honestly, the coolest thing you can do is pick up a camera from one of Beau's "shelves of shame" and use it. Experience it. Embrace its idiosyncrasies. My last two cameras came not from Beau's locked glass display cases, but from the orphanage that is their open shelving. One was a Fujica Rapid S, which takes square 24mm x 24mm photos (2/3 frame) on a 2 foot strip of 35mm film that you must manually stuff into a specialized Rapid Cassette cartridge (a failed format from the 1960s). The other was a WERRA 1, which has an industrial design aesthetic of 'Bauhaus meets Fritz Lang' and which requires you advance the film by actually cranking the lens once, in a winding motion. The price of the two cameras combined didn't even exceed double digits. Where else are you gonna have fun like that?

So what camera do I think is fun to use? ALL OF THEM... well, if they're film that is...
